

Adverse Benefit Determination Notice

If benefits are declined, in whole or in part, for a requested treatment or service you will receive an adverse benefit determination letter detailing what treatments or services were declined along with an explanation as to why they were declined.

If you believe that the determination was made in error, you have the right to appeal the decision and you will be notified of your appeal rights and instructions related to the appeals process.